The patient was a 69-year-old woman who was referred to our hospital with complaints of abdominal distention and diarrhea. Her bone marrow was aspirated, which showed monocytic and myeloid cell infiltration, and a diagnosis of acute myeloid leukemia was made. At the time of admission, a right ovarian tumor was found. The tumor was partially resected and diagnosed histologically as mucinous tumor of the ovarian surface. The patient underwent chemotherapy but the treatment had no effect on the myeloid leukemic cells. She developed acute renal failure, and died of sepsis. Her blood and bone marrow specimens were stained with trypan blue. G-banding of the bone marrow cells revealed a karyotype of 46,XX,del(15)(q12q24),-22. Flow cytometric analysis of the myeloid leukemic cells showed them to be positive for CD13, CD33, CD117, CD14, and HLA-DR and negative for myeloperoxidase. The blood cells were negative for CD13, CD33, CD117, CD14, and HLA-DR, and positive for myeloperoxidase. Q: How can i force a jQuery Ajax request in IE8 and IE9? I am using jquery ajax, and I am getting "Network Error" in IE9. It is working fine in IE8. I have googled it, and found out that this problem occurs because of javascript variable scope in IE9. How can I work around this? I don't want to use js source maps. Please advice. A: You can do this by taking advantage of MSIE's script errors for script injection protection: Although it's possible that this will work for IE7/8 82157476af
